

NICKER poster colour is made with pure arabic gum as the binder. Compared to dextrin, which is normally used, you can feel a remarkable smooth spread. In addition, it can be used for various watercolour techniques with little side effects due to the manufacturing method with no excess additives. It is a versatile paint that can be used as both an opaque and transparent watercolour (similar to gouache).

Lightfastness: With exposure to direct sunlight (a harsh test), the color:
A: Does not fade. B: Discolors a bit. C: Discolors a lot.

Bleeding (between layers of paint): When color is painted over with white paint, the color:
A: Does not bleed into the white. B: Bleeds a bit into the white. C: Will bleed into the white.

Opacity: Poster colors are, as a rule, opaque, but some colors do have a level of transparency.
A: Completely opaque. B: Transparent when wet, but opaque over light colors when dry. Dark colors may show through.
